

POLITICAL INFORMATION.

OF THE DIFFERENT PARTS OF A GOVERNMENT.

Government falls naturally into three different departments: That part which makes the laws; that which executes them; and that which administers justice, or applies the laws between man and man.

In order to maintain a free and popular government, it is necessary that these powers shall be lodged in different hands; that the body which makes the laws shall have nothing to do with their enforcement, and that the judges shall be independent of both the legislative and the executive branches of the government. Where this division of powers is well established and carefully guarded, if at the same time the nation has sufficient intelligence and public spirit to hold the rulers in check to a strict account, a people's liberties are reasonably secure, and they are able to make their government as honest and efficient as they please to have it. For at the elections they are able to remove those legislators who enact bad laws, or that executive officer who carelessly or wickedly failed in the proper enforcement of the laws. Thus the people not only rule, but are easily able to displace when the fault of misgovernment lies, and to apply the remedy. In our own government, this great division of powers is very clearly made: in the Federal Government Congress enacts the laws, but can not execute or enforce them; the President enforces the laws, but he does not make them; and the courts of the United States construe the Federal laws, and apply them in disputed cases.

ON DECENTRALIZATION.

It has been found advisable by experience, to still further subdivide the powers necessarily entrusted to government; to limit the general or, as it is usually called, the central government to the performance of certain offices or duties which apply equally to all parts of the nation; and to confide other powers and duties, having only a local application, to subordinate jurisdictions in their sphere independent governments.

Thus in our own system, the Federal Government at Washington exercises powers very strictly limited, leaving others to the state governments; and yet others to the county and even to the township governments.

This subdivision of power and authority is called decentralization; and experience has shown that this political device is of extreme importance, for two reasons: First, it is a powerful and the best means of training a people to efficient political action and the art of self-government; and second, it presents constant and important barriers to the encroachment of others upon the rights and liberties of the nation; every subdivision forming a stronghold of resistance by the people against unjust or wicked rulers.

France has for many years been a glaring example of a most vicious system of government, and this under the so-called republic; as well as under the empire, because her Republican rulers, in such as her emperors, rejected decentralization and local self-government, and adhered to a system of centralization, which made and makes liberty impossible. For in France the central government controls all the local officers, and the central office is as though the President of the United States should appoint not only the postmasters, revenue and war officers, who are properly part of the Federal executive, but also the governors of all the states, the mayors of cities, the supervisors of counties, and even the justices of the peace and local police. You do not need to think profoundly to see that independence and free government would be impossible under such a system which thus gave the central government the power to control the petty local officers from the center and domination of their neighbors, and made them responsible only to the chief authority at Washington. The first time we had a local man in the presidential chair, he would be tempted by the favorable circumstances to put the part of Napoleon I, and make himself master of the state. Nor could the people, without great difficulty, and probably revolution, resist him. To make liberty secure, the powers and responsibilities of the executive ought to be plainly limited and defined, and ought to be such and no greater, than given a bad man in the executive chair could not, during the term for which he is chosen, do serious detriment to the republic. For constitutions are made to guard against bad officers, just as laws are made to interfere with the good, but to restrain the vicious.

THE RELIGIOUS WEEKLIES.

The New York Observer notices the appointment of a committee by the "Liberal Club," and the raising of money to bring to a final decision the right of a person who does not believe in God to testify in court. The movement originated in the recent refusal of the Marine Court in New York to receive the testimony of such a person. The Observer says:

It is obvious that the oversight of the rule now existing is an abomination of the oath they take. The oath is not to be God, for the truth of what is said, and there is no God there is no God. An affirmation is made in court with the same solemnity. Neither is of any use if the witness does not believe in the moral obligation. Why does a man take the moral obligation to speak the truth? If the affirming has that sense, then his word will be accepted, though the question still remains: Shall a simple person to speak the truth be regarded as a witness, while the hypocrite in God must be regarded as an oath? But if there be no God, there is no moral system which has any hold upon conscience, no occasion for remorse in view of falsehood, no fear of punishment if the crime escapes human detection. The oath being founded on this moral sense, it is evident that its abolition must follow the admission of atheists as witnesses.

The Illustrated Christian Weekly answers the question, "What is Revival Preaching?" After promising that real revivals are not to be traced to natural causes, not the necessary consequences of revival sermons, but are due to the immediate presence of the Spirit of God, it still allows that a certain manner of preaching is most conducive thereto.

First, there is revival preaching which tends to lead God directly into the hearts and consciences of men; which, as the Parisian said of Dr. Bellamy's preaching, "spoke man little and God big." There is a time for doctrinal instruction; and there may be a necessary period of preparation for revival. But systematic instruction in doctrine is rarely revival preaching. There may be a time for simply stirring the deadened sensibilities and waking them up. But we doubt whether sensational preaching is ever really revival preaching. There is a time for ethical instruction, for teaching the moralities of the Gospel. But ethical instruction is not revival preaching. If you want to work directly for a revival of religion, you are so to preach as to impress on the hearts and consciences of men the truth that there is a God and they are but men, a King whose subjects they are, a Father whose children they are, and you are to follow the example which Christ set in the inauguration of that revival of religion which is the mother of all the rest, when he came preaching the "kingdom of God is at hand."

FLOORED.

Connecticut people are proverbially smart, and the following incident, which the New Bedford (Mass.) Mercury relates, is no exception to the rule: A religious society on one of the towns of that State was afflicted as many other societies have been and are, inasmuch as the pew-owners had a real estate right in the property. Some of them would not give up their right, nor sell it, nor consent to any action by the parish that could be legally resisted. Here was a case of tyranny. In a free republic an oligarchy ruled the majority. But in a free republic the majority is the majority, and the minority is the minority. At a parish meeting of the society it was voted to floor over the tops of the pews and build anew. The real estate remained peacefully intact below and the unyielding members found themselves literally floored.

A clergyman was endeavoring to instruct one of his Sunday-school scholars, a plough-boy, on the nature of a miracle. "Now, my boy," said he, "suppose you should see the sun rising in the middle of the night, what should you call that?" "The moon rising, sir," said the boy. "No, but," said the clergyman, "suppose you knew it was not the moon, but the sun, and that you saw it actually rise in the middle of the night, what should you think?" "Please, sir, I should think it was time to get up."

"Do you understand the English language?" said a McLean country man, addressing a lightning-rod agent. "I do," replied the agent. "Then I'll be—if I want any of your rods." The lightning rod man, somewhat electrified drove on.

"What do you live on here?" asked a visitor to Florida, of a native, as he gazed on the bareness of the country. "Live on," replied the native. "Why fish and strangers."
